"So may the outward shows be least themselves:

The world is still deceived with ornament.

In law, what plea so tainted and corrupt

But being seasoned with a gracious voice

Obscures the show of evil."

"DEALING WITH INJUSTICE"

(Irish Times Article)

"Clinically, the emotions and behaviours consequent upon perception of grave injustice are many. Injustice may bring a need to wail with primitive, howling outrage. It may show itself in scorched receding eyes that will not recount what has occurred. It may speak loudly, livid with determination to redress the wrong. It may be barely audible, unable to articulate the depth of the despair. Sometimes it will regress to childlike questioning how such unfairness could occur or be allowed. Sometimes it arms itself with anger to revenge what others will not right. It is all action and immobility, all words and silence, all reality and illusory."
